

Who is the real teacher? What qualities should he have? I want to answer these questions in his work.

I think that being a teacher is a great work. A teacher does it mean to experience the daily anxiety and stress because hard to work with children and their behavior is impossible to predict. ^{I think that} Real teacher should possess such qualities as: cheery disposition, kind, witty, have balanced judgement, able to read character, respectable, disciplined, hard-working, neat, broad-minded, intelligent, wise, well-read, educated, punctual, emotional, just, friendly and of course the ^areal teacher is the one who love children as sons and daughters.

In fact, to be a good teacher is to be a bit of an actor. This is a very important part of the technique of teaching. You must imagine that every lesson is a show and you are an actor at it. Your task is to involve children into this process, to make them lose their heart to your subject, to show all values of it. His job is to provide content that is truly interesting and meaningful to students - the study of themselves. And the teacher's task is to think first about children and only then about the subject.

A real teacher must live by their problems and, accordingly, establish a warm, supportive climate. It's quite essential for further work and further relations between a teacher and children.

Yes, in practice, teaching is an exacting ~~job~~ job which demands constant activity, creativity. It's a real devotion through life time. The real teacher is the hero.
